

Psychiatric Drug Cocktails: is fully-informed consent even possible?

Next, add a nurse practitioner⁴ and/or a psychiatrist⁵ who have the unbridled power to prescribe both⁶?

(TO DO: insert description of the problem created and insert sample combined risk profiles using manufacturers' product monographs.)

“Combining so-called anti-psychotic⁷ agents circumvents FDA safeguards and creates totally different risk profiles of which the patient/guardian would likely be totally unaware.”

~ Andee Jak

(20250406, Deirdre Moore, BBA, CFA) Imagine you are a drug manufacturer, such as Johnson & Johnson¹ (“JNJ”), that has developed a new drug for its product pipeline; but, during trials all of its subjects died once the dosage reached 20 mg/day while at 10 mg/day they didn't. All JNJ would need to do is seek FDA² approval for (and market) the lower dose. Right?

But, what if JNJ competitor Sandoz³ makes a similar drug and recommends a 10 mg/day maximum dose too?

On 20250329, I posed risk-profile questions to Internal Pharmacy⁸ at the Erie County Medical Center Corporation (“ECMCC”)⁹. Their response? “Don't [contact] us again.”

If no one has studied how the risk profile of combined-drugging could impact the patient, then how could anyone ever provide the fully-informed consent that is required for all medical procedures?
